

Have you heard
about indestructible
nanowire?

Covering silver nanowires with silicon dioxide makes the wire indestructible and highly bendable.

This unique material can be used for making next generation optical cables, which until now have been easily fractured if bent.

The new material "memorizes" its original position and regenerates when needed.

Discovery made by Estonian researcher Sergei Vlassov and his colleagues.

